What Is ADHD?

Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder, or ADHD, is a disorder that affects the structure and function of the brain

The exact causes and risk factors for ADHD are unknown, but it is thought that genetics may play an important role. In 41% to 55% of families with a child who has ADHD, at least one parent is also thought to be affected.

Symptoms of ADHD

People with ADHD experience a pattern or combination of three types of symptoms that can interfere with different aspects of life.

Inattention

A person may have a hard time staying on task, remaining focused, or keeping organized.

Hyperactivity

A person may seem to move about constantly, including when it is not appropriate. This could also mean a person excessively fidgets, taps, or talks too much.

Impulsivity

A person may act without thinking or have difficulty with self-control.

ADHD may look different in different people.
Only a healthcare professional can diagnose ADHD, so it's important to talk to your doctor about your symptoms

ADHD Can Be Disruptive

ADHD symptoms can interfere with aspects of your life such as work, school, relationships, or social interaction

ADHD can affect many day-to-day activities depending on your unique situation, including some of the following:

Morning

- Organizing yourself or your kids for the day
- Getting to work or school on time

Afternoon

- Paying attention at work or school
- Finishing work accurately and on time
- Helping kids with homework

Evening

- Interacting with family or friends
- Managing finances
- Planning the next day

About 60% of people with ADHD have symptoms that persist from childhood into adulthood

Find an ADHD Treatment Option That Works for You

Your healthcare provider will work with you to determine a treatment plan that helps you manage your ADHD symptoms

While there is currently no cure for ADHD, there are several options available to reduce symptoms and help improve functioning. These include medications, psychotherapy, education or training, or a combination of treatments.

Medication for ADHD typically comes in the form of stimulants or nonstimulants

Stimulants are the most widely used ADHD medications

Nonstimulants may be used when stimulants do not work well, have unacceptable side effects, or a nonstimulant is preferred for other reasons

Nonmedication options are often used alongside medication

- Cognitive behavioral therapy helps you develop a more mindful and structured approach to thinking and behaving
- Psychoeducation can include a coach who helps you develop life skills such as planning, management, and self-esteem
- College and work accommodations can be developed for individual situations

For more information about these options, talk to your healthcare provider.
